

Holiday like a king: High on adrenaline and style

By Varsha Meghani | Oct 4, 2017

Travelling in the lap of luxury need not translate to a sedate trip. Here's how you could go on an adventure fit for kings

Adventures in Antarctica

White Desert's eight-day excursion to the southern-most part of the world—billed as Antarctica's first luxury camp—begins with a flight in a plush private jet. Fly from Cape Town in South Africa over icebergs, and pass into 24 hours of sunshine in Antarctica. Once there, you make your way to the Whichaway Camp, whose guest ledger boasts of Nasa astronaut Buzz Aldrin and UK's Prince Harry.

Stay in heated, state-of-the-art sleeping pods, and partake in adrenaline-charged activities like trekking to blue-ice grottos, rappelling into glacial crevasses or kite-skiing. If you want something more sedate, you can hang out with Emperor penguins, unwind at the sauna or soak in Antarctica's majestic scenery. An overnight excursion to the South Pole, which requires a flight on a prop plane and a trek in frigid temperatures, is also on offer.

Price: $78,000 per person for an eight-day 'Emperors and South Pole Adventure'
