

Crystal chandeliers and helicopter services: The most luxurious glamping spots in the world revealed

- The White Desert Camp in Antarctica features insulated pods, which come in at around £9,911 a night
- A tent has been installed on the roof of the luxury Beverly Wilshire A Four Seasons Hotel in Los Angeles
- For around £2,669 guests are treated to an urban camping experience with gold leaf s'mores served up

By SADIE WHITELOCKS FOR MAILONLINE

PUBLISHED: 09:48, 10 October 2017 | UPDATED: 09:39, 12 October 2017

For £46,000 for an eight-day trip, polar explorer Patrick Woodhead takes wealthy clients on luxury safaris to Antarctica and the South Pole with his company White Desert. State-of-the-art sleeping pods are made from strong, insulated fiberglass panels and even in high winds, they remain very quiet

There is a separate pod with showers, and three pods make up the large communal living and dining area

For around £59,470 for a six to eight-day trip, polar explorer Patrick Woodhead takes wealthy clients on luxury safaris to Antarctica and the South Pole with his company White Desert.

State-of-the-art sleeping pods are made from strong, insulated fiberglass panels and even in high winds, they remain very quiet. There are double beds for couples or singles with a privacy screen for solo guests and the pods also have a washing area and toilet. There is a separate pod with showers, and three pods make up the large communal living and dining area.

An on-site chef prepares three meals a day including a continental style breakfast with hot plated breakfast options, picnics for lunch of freshly prepared smoked salmon with asparagus and three course dinners in a Game of Thrones style dining room. Champagne is also served throughout stays.